Blue/Orange

Synopsis

In a London psychiatric hospital, an enigmatic patient claims to be the son of an African dictator - a story that becomes unnervingly plausible. An incendiary tale of race, madness and a Darwinian power struggle at the heart of a dying National Health Service, Blue/Orange premiered at London's Cottesloe Theatre in April 2000 and transferred to the West End in 2001.

Customer Reviews

I really like the idea, but it's so fantastic and confused that I can't properly respect it. The concept is ambitious, but I'm not convinced that the execution of the writing matches the quality of the idea sufficiently. It is extremely casual, and just seems unfinished. Not that I'm dissatisfied with how it ends - "that was great" - but the text could use some refinement. The concept is most appropriate for a certain audience, but the text is most appropriate for a different kind of audience. The depiction of the characters comes across as crude, while their personalities don't. Character development is extremely limited; we learn more about the characters as the play progresses, but we learn little of who they are. The relationship of their motivations and actions is shallow. It is a play to read or watch, not to think about. Portrayal is slow enough that one can figure things out a little to easily. Summary: This play is shallow and doesn't express its concept as ambitiously as the idea requires.
